- use the above-mentioned concepts and theories to describe, discuss and analyse challenges related to leadership and organisational behaviour in contemporary organisations. Discuss practical implications and argue for possible solutions.

Prerequisites: (valid for students admitted to programmes within which the course is offered)

The course is designed for students with an interest in business and management from engineering and/or business administration programmes.

The courses within Linköping University Summer Academy are all at the bachelor level. To meet the general entry requirements, students must have completed 1 year full-time studies (passed 60 ECTS credits or equivalent) from one of Linköping University's partner universities.

Organisation:

The teaching is based on lectures, seminars and group and individual assignments. The lectures provide the theoretical basis for the course, while case studies and other student-active learning assignments are discussed in seminars. Throughout the course, students are expected to hand-in several assignments and will need to report on their learning orally and in writing

Course contents:

The course takes its point of departure in research conducted at LiU and offers an interdisciplinary perspective on issues of leadership and organisational behaviour in contemporary organisations. The course focuses on concepts and theories related to group dynamics, team development, organisation and leadership and lays a foundation for further discussion and analysis of aspects of leadership and organisational behaviour in project-based organisations.
